

While promoting international friendship is an admirable thing, granting permission for unlicensed visitors to communicate via the 70cm hamband is not a wise way to do so. This would set a dangerous precedent, which could end up with far-reaching repercussions. Far better for the visitors to purchase inexpensive FRS radios while visiting our country, and to keep the unlicensed operators, both foreign and native, on an unlicensed frequency.